The Bookshop ON JACARANDA STREET BY MARLISH GLORIE

About the Book

It's never too late to run away from home!

Helen burns her bed and her bridges when she leaves home to run a second hand bookshop. But can you ever really discard the past? There are thousands of musty books to sort through, an ex-husband to get over and a drunk determined to muscle his way back into the bookstore business.

Helen desperately wants life to be a literary novel but it's looking more like pulp fiction. As quirky characters browse the shelves of her bookshop, Helen fights for the right to choose a future that is not yet written.

About the Author

Born in Western Australia to Dutch migrant parents, Marlish Glorie grew up in Queens Park and was educated by the Sisters of Mercy before she trained to be a nurse at Royal Perth Hospital. After a stint at nursing she studied Theatre Arts and Creative Writing for an arts degree. Her last full-length play The Butcher played to sell out audiences at the Blue Room. Marlish is married to Western Australian landscape artist Lindsay Pow. They have two children and live in Palmyra.
